HUNT PROPAGANDA MACHINE FOR ALL OVER WORLD

New York Official Tells Senate Committee How Teutons Organized to Foster Friendliness Toward Germany.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20.—Propaganda machinery set up by the German government in Berlin and throughout the world to spread Germanic ideas and the methods of financing this in the United States, were described to the senate investigating committee by Alfred L. Becker, deputy attorney-general of New York.

The witness also told of his investigation for the French government of the success of Bolo Pasha, executed as a French traitor, in getting $1,650,000 of German money in this country for purchase of the Paris Journal, but added that since apparently the Paris Journal did not change its attitude of loyalty toward France, Becker was not a "pure scoundrel" of the German government.

Becker read documents gathered partly by the British secret service, showing that the German foreign office and other government departments at Berlin maintained elaborate systems, both before and after the European war began, to influence thought all over the world, working mainly through the press. Branches of German banks and commercial houses co-operated to promote friendly relations toward Germany. Journalists, college professors, bankers, business men and commercial consular attaches—many of them foreign citizens of the country in which they worked—were employed, Becker said.

Usually the propaganda was insidious with an attempt to conceal its real nature or purpose. As early as 1909, said Becker, Gen. von Skai, a former German reserve officer and later auditor of accounts of New York city, was told on a visit to Berlin by a representative of the foreign office's press bureau, that he would be valuable in case of a future war, to keep in touch with the press in the United States. There was no evidence, however, that he acted in this capacity after the United States entered the war, the witness said.

The German government in May, 1914, three months before the war opened, tried in vain to buy the Ottoman Telegraphic News agency, with headquarters in Hagdad, to spread German propaganda. The publication of a German edition of Current Literature, a magazine, of which George Sylvester Viereck, in the United States, and his father, Louis Viereck, in Berlin, were promoters, was mentioned by the witness, together with the German Museum at Harvard and the movements to exchange professors with American universities, as German propaganda moves.

One example of enemy propaganda, said Becker, consisted of the systematic effort late in 1917, to spread throughout the world the idea that Germany was on the verge of internal revolt, and that the Kaiser soon would be overthrown. The fact that the dissemination of these reports was encouraged by the chief German government censor, was convincing evidence that the efforts were propaganda, intended to paralyze the prosecution of the war, in Becker's opinion. He said these reports had been sent out of Germany by George T. O'Dell, correspondent of the New York Evening Mail, after the United States had entered the war, and were circulated widely by the McClure Newspaper syndicate, described as a subsidiary of the Mail.

Senator Reed, who is not a member of the committee, interrupted to ask whether similar articles had been published by other newspapers then, and even down to the present and that developments had not borne them out. Becker said this was true, but insisted that the reports were inspired by the German foreign office late in 1917.

Becker said the Trans-Ocean News agency maintained a wireless service intended to influence many South American peoples, who the German South American institute, and the German News service for Portugal and Spain, subsidized by the German government, had similar functions.

Becker told the committee that enemy propaganda in the United States was disclosed incidentally during his investigation of the activities of Bolo Pasha in promoting the financing of the Paris Journal and in what was described as an attempt to form a news alliance between the Journal and William Randolph Hearst's newspaper.

The witness told of an unsuccessful effort by Bolo in conference with E. G. Grace, of the Bethlehem Steel corporation, to get the company to purchase the Journal, but added that he believed this move was "entirely camouflaged, intended to cover up the real purpose of his visit to the United States."

Former German Ambassador von Bernstorff assented so readily to Bolo's proposal that the German government advance the money to purchase the Journal, the witness said, that the New York investigators proceeded on the theory that Hearst might have arranged the purchase before Bolo came to the United States. On this point, however, Becker said:

"I do not say today that I consider this theory in any way established. The witness said the evidence of the existence of a news connection between the Journal and the Hearst newspapers."

Many good lessons come to us with the approach of the Christmas season. The spirit of selflessness gives place to the spirit of altruism, or concern for the welfare and happiness of others. The poor and unfortunate engage the thought and attention of the prosperous and happy. And too, we broaden our mental horizon and while exchanging gifts and kindnesses with friends and associates in the home circle, our thoughts fly to other communities, other states and even to other lands. The man who has been successful during the year feels an obligation to divide his blessings and accumulations with someone else.

Stored away in the trunks and closets of many homes are articles that would gladden the hearts of the less fortunate. They are embalm in some kind of sentiment and, by the assistance of the family, are kept from year to year. Occasionally the fire bell rings and if these things are not destroyed by fire the water of the fire company renders them less valuable, if not practically worthless.

Then there is the danger of the sneak thief who lurks in the shadows to prey upon helplessness and valuable family relics. We do not know how better to make yourself and somebody else happy by giving these things to some worthy cause than by struggling against odds to live a life that is useful.

Overlooking the helpful and beautiful lessons of the Christmas season, too many persons glory in which is evil and hurtful. The erstwhile sober man takes occasion to become intoxicated and instead of taking joy in his family, he carries rowdiness and debauchery. The scent of powder in the air is a bad omen for peace and other dangerous weapons, which too often result in accidents and crime. Children should be taught the meaning of Christmas at the fireside and in the schools, and all good citizens should co-operate with the peace officers in the maintenance of law and order.
